Did You Know?

- Dora Serrano, NPH El Salvador's National Director, is an Hermana Mayor ("Older Sister"), who was raised at the home. ▶
- Since opening in 1999, the main purpose of the home has changed in response to national legislation around child welfare. Once a home solely for orphaned and abandoned children, NPH El Salvador evolved to serve two different populations: children who live inside the home, and community students. These students receive scholarships spanning from early education to university, as well as meals and healthcare. They come from low income families that cannot afford to support their children's education, which is the case for most Salvadorans.
- Students in 8th and 9th grades attend vocational workshops in baking and/or sewing.
- Following the COVID-19 lockdown, an inventive system of protocols and schedules was created to safely welcome students back to school. This resulted in a return to school for 100% of the kids living in the home and 90% of the students from the Community Programs. In addition, a variety of mental-health activities and workshops that promoted resiliency were implemented.
- The agriculture program yields a variety of vegetables, such as corn, bananas, cashew, papaya, and native plants such as loroco, which is a prominent ingredient in main dishes such as pupusas. The farm provides nourishing food for children and staff, and also serves as a living-classroom. ▶
